

Jacqui Fatka is lead economist for farm supply and biofuels in CoBank's Knowledge Exchange research division. Over the past 20 years, she's honed her expertise in ag policy, biofuels, trade, regulations, ag labor, climate-smart agriculture and farm management.

Prior to joining CoBank, Ms. Fatka wrote thousands of articles as an agriculture journalist and staff editor at Feedstuffs, Farm Futures and most recently at Agri-Pulse. She cultivated her love of ag policy during a college internship with the Iowa Pork Producers Association, working in Sen. Chuck Grassley's Capitol Hill press office. Ms. Fatka has also served as a consultant for Iowa Industries of the Future, an effort to bring together major players in the biorenewables industry.

Ms. Fatka earned a bachelor's degree in journalism and mass communications and a minor in agriculture education from Iowa State University. She grew up on a diversified grain and livestock farm in southwest Iowa and now lives on a small acreage in central Ohio.